

Praise for David Leaser's work from the California Horticultural Society

In this book review, the California Horticultural Society praises the artistry in David Leaser's work. "It is a delight to see such a lavish and seductive photo book given over to one plant family, especially one's favorite."

The full review is in the attached PDF.

The California Horticultural Society is an educational, non-profit organization dedicated to bringing together gardeners and garden professionals to share experiences. Its mission is to provide educational opportunities for California gardeners and horticulturalists. The Society is the oldest plant association in California. In the winter of 1933 an unusually frigid air mass withered gardens in the greater San Francisco Bay Area. A small group of concerned gardeners met to compare plant survival information, and they became the nucleus of the present Society.